SECRETARY SCHEDLER TALKS ONLINE VOTER REGISTRATION ON NPR

BATON ROUGE, La.—Louisiana Secretary of State Tom Schedler participated in an extensive interview with National Public Radio (NPR) concerning online voter registration which aired Monday on “All Things Considered.” Louisiana was one of the first states in the nation to implement online voter registration in 2006 and is considered a leader in election technology.

“I am so proud to tout Louisiana’s election system whenever I can,” said Secretary Schedler. “Most people in our state don’t realize how advanced we are in terms of using technology in voting—whether it’s online voter registration or our award-winning GeauxVote app for election information. A total of 20 states have joined us in embracing online registration and now, several others, including Texas and Florida are considering similar programs.”
